The History and Cultures of the Empires of Iran, Iraq, Syria, Armenia, and Afghanistan from Cyrus to Muhammad
Lectures TTh 9:00a–12:15p

Professor Kevin van Bladel (kevin.vanbladel@yale.edu)
Office hours TBD

Course Description
This is an introduction to the history and cultures of the ancient empires of the Near East (Middle East), focusing on the period from the Assyrian and Persian Empires to the establishment of Islam (ca 900 BCE–ca 750 CE). Students will learn how to use ancient primary sources critically to create a historical narrative and to understand the modern appropriation of ancient history for political and other purposes. We will also discuss the role of ancient empires in the formation of modern religions.

Extensive readings in primary sources composed in ancient Persian, Armenian, Aramaic, Greek, and Latin, ranging from royal inscriptions to chronicles of war and strife. Many of the events covered in this course contributed decisively to the demography of the present-day Near East and the social characteristics of its people, from the distribution of language communities to the variety of Near Eastern religions. Therefore, students will gain some understanding of the makeup of the modern Near East, including how the population of the region became predominantly Muslim. Two major themes will be the nature of empires and the use and interpretation of primary written materials to reconstruct past cultures.

This course fulfills a Yale College distribution requirement in the Humanities. It also counts as a Foundations course for the major in Near Eastern Languages & Civilizations.

Goals
Students will develop extensive knowledge about human societies over a thousand years of Near Eastern history as well as understanding of that history through various critical methods of interpretation.

Readings
Readings for this course are available in four different formats: published books, photocopies, web sites, and readings for download as pdf files via Orbis or Canvas.

The readings assigned for a given week are to be read prior to the lectures of the week under which they are listed.

Below are lists of the two required books for purchase. Most of the photocopies are available only as a bound reader to be ordered and purchased at TYCO (262 Elm Street).

Study Guides and Short Daily Tests

This intensive course requires students to digest a large amount of written material and orally presented material from lectures in a short time. To facilitate this, the instructor will provide a study guide for every session, given out each Thursday for the sessions in the following week. These study guides provide prompts for learning in the form of questions and topics to be understood. These should structure the student’s reading and investigation of sources assigned.

Every class session will begin with a short test (or long quiz) to activate the student’s knowledge of the materials prompted by the study guide. These eight short tests cumulatively comprise the largest single portion of the student’s grade.

Class Attendance Policy

Attendance is mandatory. In this intensive course, one session is equivalent to at least one week of class in a regular semester. Experience shows that students who show up and pay attention do well in class. Participation in class discussion and analysis is also a major opportunity to earn credit in this course.

Minimize Use of Computers and Smart Phones in Use during Class Sessions

Students are asked to avoid using computers and smart phones during lecture or discussion section. Readings made available electronically may be consulted on such devices during class (not during quizzes or exams). If there is an emergency call that you must have, please leave the room quietly. Research amply shows that students learn better if they take notes by hand and avoid the distractions of the internet. Moreover, the use of technology can distract your neighbor in class. Please comply with this request.

General Instructions for Writing in this Course

- Format anything written outside of class double-spaced with Times New Roman, 12-point font, 1” margins at top and bottom, 1” margins on sides. These margins are not the default setting for new documents in Microsoft Word. Make sure you proofread and spell-check. Spelling and grammar are considered in the evaluation.

- All material written outside of class must include references to any primary sources and a bibliography of works consulted. This includes assigned readings. Cite everything scrupulously.
• Avoid hyperbole about the greatness or significance of ancient objects, texts, or persons. Focus instead on the substance of your argument. Your essays are not to persuade others to take an interest but to show what your analysis can produce.

A Word About Plagiarism

You must document all of your source material in any writing done outside of class. If you take any text from somebody else, you must make it clear the text is being quoted and where the text comes from. You must also cite any sources from which you obtain numbers, ideas, or other material. If you have any questions about what does or does not constitute plagiarism, ask! Plagiarism is a serious offense and will be treated severely. Fortunately, it is also easy to avoid and if you are careful about giving credit where credit is due you should not run into any problems.

Yale’s Center for Learning and Teaching provides resources for avoiding plagiarism here: https://ctl.yale.edu/writing/using-sources/understanding-and-avoiding-plagiarism

Museum Report: Yale University Art Gallery, Dura-Europos exhibit.

Due July 21.

Visit the Yale University Art Gallery (1111 Chapel Street, at Chapel and York) to see the Mary and James Ottoway Gallery of Ancient Dura-Europos. Before going, learn about the exhibit here:

http://media.artgallery.yale.edu/duraeuropos/

Study this exhibit. Referring to at least three specific objects in the exhibit from three different periods or regions, discuss the value and limitations of the exhibit you visited in 2–3 pages. What, if anything, does seeing these objects in person teach you? What kinds of objects were chosen for display, and why? Turn in your report electronically the instructor, along with the photo of yourself standing in front of one of these exhibits.

Bring friends with you and have fun!

Tips on writing your report: If you raise a question, venture an attempt to answer it. If you criticize the exhibit, suggest possible reasons for the shortcomings you discuss. It is one thing to appreciate an object, another to relate it to the contents of this course. Aim for both.

Analytical Essay

The instructions for the analytical essay, worth 15 points in your final grade, will be given in the weeks prior to the final exam. The essay is due at the beginning of the final class session.

COURSE SCHEDULE

Schedule subject to change. All changes will be announced in class.
WEEK 1: Empires of ancient Iraq

Session 1, June 30: Introduction. Geography. Tradition, recovery, and archaeology.

Museum assignment:
Visit Yale’s Peabody Museum of Natural History to see the exhibit “Ancient Mesopotamia Speaks.”
The last day of this exhibit is June 30, so please see it either before the class begins or immediately after the first class session!

170 Whitney Ave, New Haven, CT 06511
Museum hours: Tuesday through Saturday 10:00 am to 5:00 pm Sunday Noon to 5:00 pm
Admission costs: $13.00 Adults: $9.00. Children ages 3 through 18, and college students with ID: $6.00. Admission is free for individuals with a Yale ID.

- Read the “Nabonidus Cylinder” from Sippar at livius.org: www.livius.org/sources/content/nabonidus-cylinder-from-sippar/?

- Read the “Nabonidus Chronicle” at livius.org: www.livius.org/sources/content/mesopotamian-chronicles-content/abc-7-nabonidus-chronicle/?

- Read the “Cyrus Cylinder” at livius.org. (There are two tabs to click: “Introduction” and “Translation.” Read both.) www.livius.org/sources/content/cyrus-cylinder/?

Online assignment this week:
Explore the British Museum website “Mesopotamia”

www.mesopotamia.co.uk/menu.html

Here you will find a lot of hyperlinked pages with information and images about ancient Mesopotamian cultures. Some of it is pretty basic, but you should get a sense of the materials available to historians to tell what life was like in this region in antiquity.

Make sure you click “Time” → “Story” (follow story on early archaeology)
“Writing” → “Story” (follow development of cuneiform writing)
“Assyria” → “Palaces” and “Warfare”
“Babylonia” → “Astronomers” and “Trade”

Feel free to explore the rest of the site, take your time, and have fun!
• Read Herodotus, Book 1: section 1 and sections 95 to 216 (section 95 to the end of Book 1). Freely available here in the translation of G. C. Macaulay: [http://www.sacred-texts.com/cla/hh/]. [Here Herodotus gives the story of Cyrus and an account of Persian culture.]

WEEK 2. The Persian Empire

Session 3, July 7: The Achaemenian Empire.

Online assignment: Read the royal inscriptions of the Achaemenids. (This is in addition to the readings listed above!)

[www.livius.org/category/persia/?]

Go to “Achamenid Royal inscriptions” ([www.livius.org/sources/content/achaemenid-royal-inscriptions/]. Here you will find a list of the royal inscriptions of the Persian kings, along with many images of the originals. Your job is to study them and read the English translations of the following.

1. Read DB (columns #1–#5) and DBa–k. Pay close attention; this is the most important document written for any Achaemenid king. Take a good look at the accompanying photographs of the reliefs.

2. Read DSf at the palace of Susa.

3. Read DNa and DNb on Darius' tomb at Naqš-i Rustam.

4. Also explore the links to the sites of Persepolis, Susa, and Naqš-i Rustam. Pay special attention to the photos of the inscriptions.

5. Now move on to the inscriptions of Xerxes I at Persepolis. Read XPa and XPh.

6. Finally, read some of the inscriptions of later Achaemenids. Take your time.

Questions to answer: Where were the inscriptions made? Locate them on a map. What messages do they offer? Why did the kings inscribe them? For whom were they written?

• Read Josef Wiesehöfer, “The Achaemenid Empire,” in The Dynamics of Ancient Empires, edited by Ian Morris and Walter Scheidel, Oxford University Press 2009, pp. 76-105. The text is freely available to you through Orbis. Simply look up this book and, using an on-campus connection or an off-campus connection with Yale VPN, download the book chapter or read it online.
• Read “Conquering and Ruling Pre-Modern Afghanistan,” from Thomas Barfield, Afghanistan: A Cultural and Political History, pp. 66–89. This reading does not deal with the Persian Empire per se, but it consists of comparative and theoretical material essential for understanding the contents of this course. Find the right pages through the e-book as made available through Orbis.

• Read Xenophon’s The Expedition of Cyrus, pp. 3–105.

WEEK 3. Warlord dynasties and new empires

Session 5, July 14: Alexander’s successors. The Seleucids and Arsacids.

• Read Josef Wiesehöfer, “The Achaemenid Empire,” in The Dynamics of Ancient Empires, edited by Ian Morris and Walter Scheidel, Oxford University Press 2009, pp. 76-105. The text is freely available to you through Orbis. Simply look up this book and, using an on-campus connection or an off-campus connection with Yale VPN, download the book chapter or read it online.

• Read “Conquering and Ruling Pre-Modern Afghanistan,” from Thomas Barfield, Afghanistan: A Cultural and Political History, pp. 66–89. This reading does not deal with the Persian Empire per se, but it consists of comparative and theoretical material essential for understanding the contents of this course. Find the right pages through the e-book as made available through Orbis.

• Read Xenophon’s The Expedition of Cyrus, pp. 3–105.

Online assignment this week: Browse Parthia.com.

www.parthia.com

This is essentially a scholarly fan site for the ancient Parthian kingdom. It contains maps, essays, and extensive bibliography. Start by browsing the site to see what’s there.

One of the main primary sources available from the Parthian kingdom is coins, together with a limited number of art objects and durable luxury goods. What can you learn by studying the online coin catalogue and other information on this website?

Write a concise summary of your findings (no more than a page) to discuss in your section meeting. What do these coins tell us about the Parthian dominion?

• Read “An Incidental Annexation” and “Rome, Syria, Parthians and Persians,” from Kevin Butcher, Roman Syria and the Near East, pp. 19–60.

• Read Keith Hopkins, “The Political Economy of the Roman Empire,” in The Dynamics of Ancient Empires, edited by Ian Morris and Walter Scheidel, Oxford University Press 2009, pp. 178-204. The text is freely available to you through Orbis. Look up this book and, using an on-campus connection or an off-campus connection with Yale VPN, download the book chapter or read it online.

• Read Dignas and Winter, pp. 9–32, pp. 53–88, pp. 119–130.
• Read handouts: Shapur’s trilingual inscription (ŠKZ) at Naqš-i Rustam and the inscription of Kirdir.

Online assignment this week: Study the Sasanian Rock Reliefs.
(This is in addition to the readings listed above!)

www.livius.org/category/persia/

This is the same website where you read the Achaemenid inscriptions. Now you are looking at inscriptions and rock carvings from hundreds of years later, portraying the Sasanian kings. Go to the bottom of the page and click on “Sasanian rock reliefs” (www.livius.org/articles/misc/sasanian-rock-reliefs/). Focus on nos. 50, 53, 55, 57, 60, 63, 73, 74, 80, and 81–84. (No. 57 is the site of the inscription ŠKZ on the handout.)

Questions to answer: How do these reliefs portray the kings? What are the kings shown as doing? What symbols did the sculptors use, and why did they use them? Pay attention also to the locations where these reliefs were made. Did their locations have any special meaning? Find and identify the priest named Kartir (a.k.a. Kirdir), too.

When you’re done studying the reliefs, go back to the main page and click on “Sasanian crowns” (www.livius.org/articles/dynasty/sasanians/sasanian-crowns/). This will give you some close-ups of the elaborate headgear that these kings wore. Each one had a unique crown that can be used to identify him in coins and in other depictions. There are links to images of these coins so you can see for yourself.

WEEK 4. Persian Kingdom and Roman Empire

Session 7, July 21: The Sasanian Persian Kingdom.

• Read excerpt from Ammianus Marcellinus, pp. 148–175.

• Museum report due.

Session 8, July 23: Countries between the two powers.

• Evening showing of the movie “Agora,” 7pm. Details to be announced.
WEEK 5. The Great War, the Advent of Islam, and the Caliphate

Session 9, July 28: Persian ascendency and the great war of 603–630. Muhammad’s movement and the collapse of the Sasanian kingdom.

Session 10, July 30: The first Islamic state and its empire. Course conclusion. Final exam.

- Read Michael Cook, “The long-term geopolitics of the pre-modern Middle East,” Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, Series 3, 26, 1–2 (2016), pp. 33–41. You can find this article online at the database jstor.org. Use jstor.org from an on-campus connection to search for it. You can read it online or download it as a pdf file.
- analytical essay due
- final exam in last 90 minutes of class session
